Maritime archaeology explores humanity’s interactions with aquatic environments through the analysis and interpretation of cultural remains. This course presents an introduction to the field of maritime archaeology and examines some important shipwreck projects so far undertaken by its practitioners. The course will focus largely on case studies pertaining the investigations of wrecked sailing vessels conducted within the geographical region of the Americas.